POLAR VORTEX

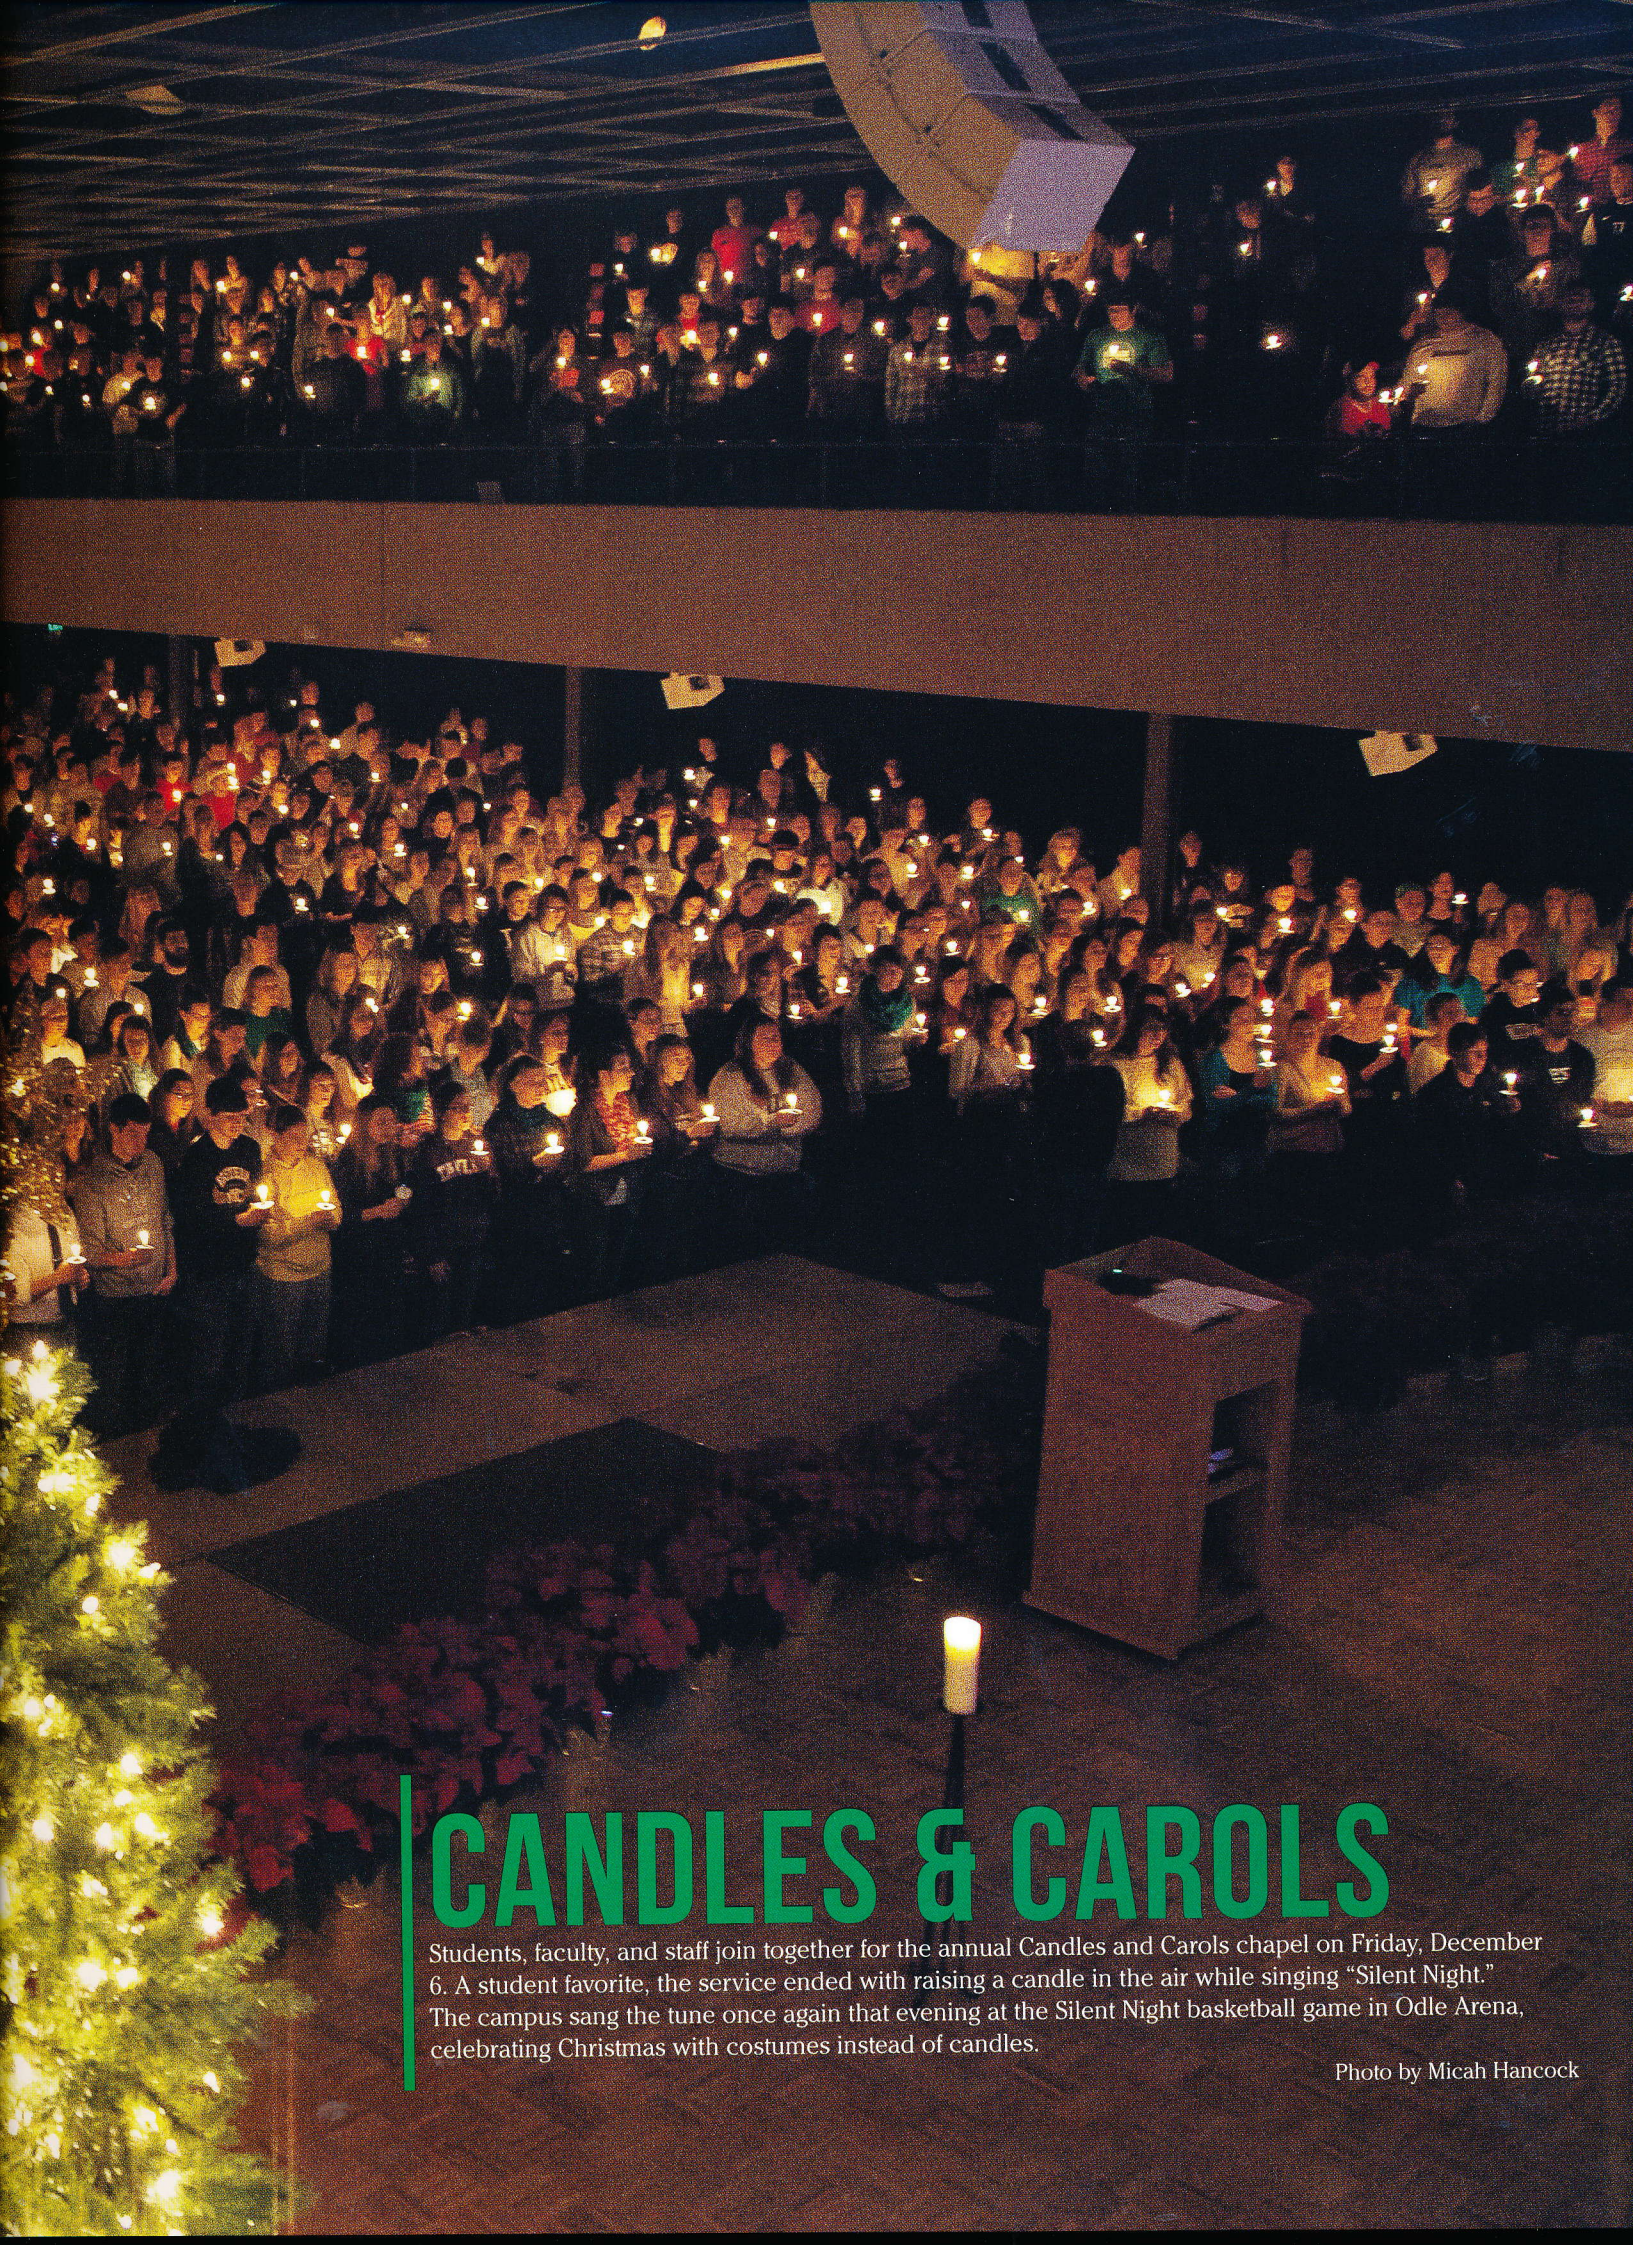

For the months of January, February, and March, the Midwest (including Indiana) was trapped in a cycle of cold weather known as a "Polar Vortex." The first two days of January term were cancelled because of the cold, with daily high temperatures around -11 degrees Fahrenheit. The city of Indianapolis received 55.1 inches of snow in the winter of 2013–14 by April, including 26.9 inches in January alone. On February 5, the first Wednesday of spring semester,, classes were cancelled again after Chapel because of extreme temperatures and snow.

CANDLES & CAROLS

Students, faculty, and staff join together for the annual Candles and Carols chapel on Friday, December 6. A student favorite, the service ended with raising a candle in the air while singing "Silent Night." The campus sang the tune once again that evening at the Silent Night basketball game in Odle Arena, celebrating Christmas with costumes instead of candles.

RE

Remember. Rewind. Relive. What else is a yearbook for?

As our nine-person staff was discussing the direction for the 116th edition of The Ilium in September, we determined one of the larger goals of the book: to show what it felt like to be a student in 2014. Recording dates and places of events is easy, but recapturing the energy of the Airband stage and the thrill of your team making it to nationals—well, that's hard. Our minds absorb emotion in the moment, but weeks (or years) later, it can be difficult to recall more than the basic details.

As our staff pushed the book's creativity and included more names, faces, quotes, and stories than our expectations demanded, we thought of you. We created this edition of The Ilium to help you recapture your time at Taylor, whether you've just picked up the book and are flipping through it for the first time or you're reminiscing 30 years after your graduation.

So, go ahead—remember, rewind, and relive it all again.

1. O-Groups play field games on the lawn behind the DC. O-Groups spent time together during Welcome Weekend doing group activities such as scavenger hunts and visiting faculty and staff houses.

2. Kate Berkey and Kate Yoshino spend time with their wing during a meal at the Hoedown. The Hoedown was an event that allowed freshmen to meet new friends and upperclassmen to catch up with other returning students.

3. JJ Becker and Grace Carver dance together at the Hoedown during Welcome Weekend. As usual, a band and caller led the square dancing.

4. Mariel Heins helps a freshman student move in. O-Group leaders assist parents and students by helping move students into their new homes at Taylor.

BREUNINGER HALL

Everything is really new," junior Hunter Sims said. "I remember thinking, 'I hope I don't break anything because they'll know it was me!'"

As students explored Taylor's newest residence hall, they discovered new living spaces and how to make Breuninger their home. Junior Erica Smith noted starting traditions that could exist for years was "daunting," but it was also an opportunity. The first month of school included late-night mystery Polar Pop runs to the nearby "Handy Andy" gas station, secret debates, and a worship session in the laundry room. Freshman Prisca Sakeuh hoped to look back on what would become annual events in Breu and say, "We started that."

Most traditions, though, developed day by day. "We're letting Breu seep out of the building and into our lives," Sims said.

As Breu looked to find its footing, however, it didn't want to become defined by its choices. For every Wengatz guy called a prep and every English girl called a baker, Breu just wanted to be Breu.

"People are already trying to make stereotypes," neighboring Gerig PA Mikayla Goode said. "I hope for Breu those silly things don't stick."

Although it seemed the rest of campus was trying to determine where Breu fit into campus social life, its own residents weren't as concerned.

AS STUDENTS EXPLORED TAYLOR'S NEWEST RESIDENCE HALL, THEY DISCOVERED NEW LIVING SPACES AND HOW TO MAKE BREUNINGER THEIR HOME.

"We're finding our identity as a building," freshman Hana Feiter said. "What are we as a whole?"

As students settle into their rooms for the years to come, don't expect them to settle into a one-size-fits-all identity or even one similar to others on campus.

"We should start from scratch," Sims said. "[We're] not just making a mesh of old traditions."

2. Alumni and faculty enjoy a conversation during a warm October afternoon. The dedication ceremony on October 11 featured multiple speakers, including Dean of Faculty Development Faye Chechowich.

3. Faculty, alumni, and students come together during Homecoming Weekend for the Breuninger Hall dedication service. The ceremony celebrated the work and heritage of Dr. Ruth Ann Breuninger, who helped start the J-term Lighthouse program.

Senior Mel Kerigan found this year's Airband more work than in the past. Now she was not just committed to attending rehearsals—she was choreographer for her wing's entire act. For her last Airband performance, she choreographed a dance for 2nd South English called "Love Story." The routine used several songs to tell the story of young love with all its twists and turns.

Mel was not able to participate in her wing's audition in the fall of 2012, so she began planning for the next year's Airband in the spring of 2013. She put the finishing touches on the choreography during the summer.

The final routine included "Girlfriend" by Avril Lavigne, "We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together" by Taylor Swift, "Dance with Me Tonight" by Olly Murs, "Wouldn't It Be Nice" by the Beach Boys, and "It's Gotta Be You" by the Backstreet Boys. She asked a few girls from other wings on 2nd English and friends from Broho and 3rd Center Wengatz to be in the act.

The hardest part of this process came early in the semester as Mel had to deal with logistics. She wanted to make sure everyone could get to every practice, so it often became frustrating when participants could not come to learn the choreography she had prepared. Through late-night practices, a lot of hard work, and a successful audition, Mel and her wing earned the second spot in the Airband line-up.

But Mel was also a bundle of nerves. Her emotions ranged from “freaking out” that her group would not get on stage by the time the music began to feeling nervous because of all the people she could see.

Mel was pleased with the performance, though, and how well the group pulled off the routine at both the 6:30 and 8:30 p.m. shows. “My group is awesome,” she said.

Her favorite part? Watching her choreography come to life. As the Avril Lavigne character who tried to woo the boys away, it was hard to stay in character. “I was sitting on the side of the stage, trying to look sassy and mean, but I was so happy that they were all dipping at the same time and doing lifts together,” Mel said. — Diana Friend and Sally Wynalda

MELON & GOURD

1. A hidden member of 3rd West Wengatz is escorted to the front of Rediger Chapel by a group of friends pretending to row a wooden boat. Every fall, the wing participates in a week-long game of tag with a melon and the gourd; whoever ends the week with them must take a bite of the often-dropped-and-cracked fruits.
2. Scott Collins, Will Severns, and Trevor Myers launch Tim Mlller inside the rocket away from the gourd. The game of tag ended Friday, October 4, and each member of the wing attempted to find a creative way to sneak past the crowd to touch the doors of Rediger Chapel before 10 a.m.
3. Nate Martinez and Charlie Richert walk toward the front of the chapel after driving around the Vayhinger Loop several times. Many members of the wing used decoys with covered faces to distract the people holding the melon and gourd.
4. The men of 3rd West Wengatz pose in their costumes after the melon and gourd find their final owners. This year marked the 20th anniversary of the tradition.
5. Braden Conn and Kyle Ditthadrt spoof the television show "Breaking Bad" in their entrance. This year's Melon and Gourd finale fell during Parents and Family Weekend, so a number of students' family members joined the already-full crowd.
6. Senior Josh Chapman, with the help of several of his floormates, makes his final run toward Rediger. After four years of avoiding the melon and gourd, Chapman became the first member of Third West to never get caught with either the melon or the gourd.
7. Max Romanowski and Sam Schuette zip around in their Mario Kart-inspired costumes. Unfortunately, Max's cart wasn't fast enough to prevent him from getting stuck with the gourd for a short time.

YOUTH CONFERENCE

1. Lane Gramling, Melvin Susanto, Chad Ibach, and Nate Vogel perform as the Only Direction, a spoof of boy band One Direction. The group, which also included David Maldonado, reprised their Reject Show performance at Youth Conference.

2. Jeffrey Dean shares on the weekend's theme "Justified." Dean founded his ministry, that focuses on ministering to teens, in 1993 and has since spoken to more than 3 million people nationwide.

3. High school students cheer for Only Direction. Each visiting student was hosted in campus dorms by a Taylor student for the weekend to get a feel for Taylor's resident life.

The invites are sent, reservations made, practices done, and planning complete. The cabinet leaders, small group leaders, band, speaker, performer, and—most important—the guests join together in one place. It's a weekend of growth, renewal, and justification. This is Youth Conference.

The electric guitar's lead line rings out across Rediger Chapel. The bass jumps in with the drums as teenagers gather around the stage. The singer sings, "Wake within me, you're in my heart forever—dance!" Suddenly, students are jumping, spinning, singing, and shouting. Red and blue lights mix with the excitement of students as the band leads worship.

"It was a real joy to be involved with the Youth Conference staff," band leader Christian Kiedrowski says. "They really made the weekend happen without a hitch. It was a truly awesome experience to lead the students in worship and to get to work with so many great musicians on campus."

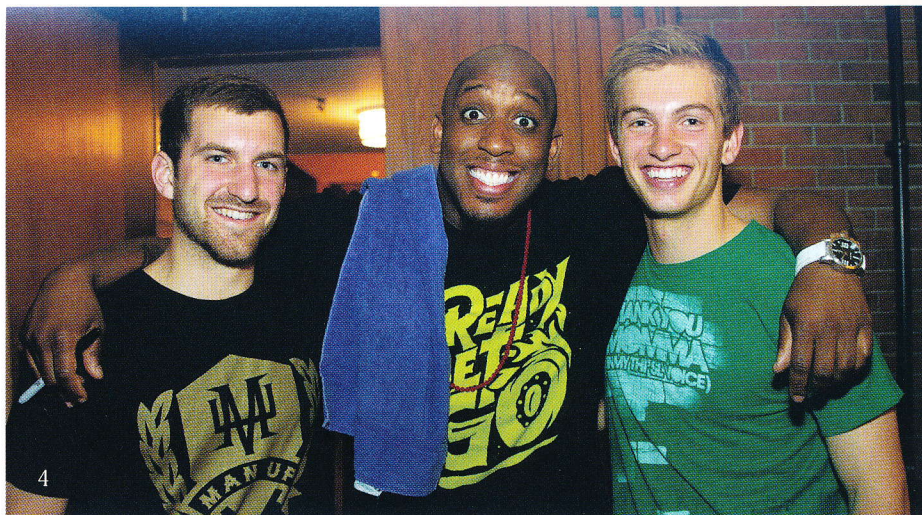

YC takes place during the spring semester. High school students engage with a collegiate community of believers through service-learning projects, worship, small groups, concerts, and sermons.

"College students can positively impact high school students through YC weekend," senior Chad Ibach says. "I think it is a great thing and needed in the lives of those who attend."

This year, Jeffrey Dean and Derek Minor joined the Taylor community to show students what it means to be "justified," focusing on Galatians 2:16. Derek Minor performed a concert during the Saturday night session. Jeffrey Dean, a counselor, author, and ordained pastor, shared his wisdom in messages with visiting students.

By the end of the weekend, lives are changed, hearts are mended, and spirits are revived. This is Youth Conference.

5. Sam Davies helps lead worship with the Youth Conference band. High school students from across the country visited for the weekend to learn more about their faith through several sessions of worship and a speaker.

6. Students have fun while creating a huge mess of toilet paper in the Kesler Student Activities Center. Between worship sessions, students participated in games, service projects, and small group meetings.

TAYLATHON

2. David Aronson prepares to jump off his bike so Grason Poling can start the next lap for the freshman team. Each team wore a different color so spectators knew their locations on the course: seniors wore yellow, juniors wore blue, sophomores wore red, and freshmen wore green.

3. The men’s race kicks off with a bit of trouble for the seniors with a loose chain on one of the wheels. Both the senior and sophomore teams needed to make multiple repairs to their bikes throughout the race, and sometimes they even needed to change bikes mid-lap.

4. Junior Stephen Herman coasts through one of the men’s 48 laps. The junior men claimed first place while the seniors took second, the freshmen placed third, and the sophomores finished the day in fourth.

5. The sophomore women’s win is greeted by cheers of their class members. The seniors finished shortly after, followed by the juniors then freshmen.

6. Christi Dithrich hops off the bike as Sarah Stratton grabs the handles. One of the unique rules of the race was that the bike can never stop moving, so the wheels did not stop rolling when teams changed riders.

7. David Aronson, Isaac Gilmore, and Darius Farmer pause each of their team’s efforts in the penalty box. If any rider cut corners or skipped part of the course, the next rider had to wait a short amount of time in the penalty box before starting their first lap.

3. Stephen Newhall plays Truffaldino, who attempts to increase his income by working for two employers in The Servant of Two Masters. Actors prepped for the show by learning the art of commedia dell'arte in a J-term class taught by director Terrance Volden.

4. The cast of The Cherry Orchard gathers for a party just before the climax of the play. To reflect the setting and themes of the story, the set included a forest created with real trees in the background, and the main stage was designed to look like a tree stump.

5. Rain pours in the final scene of The Miracle Worker as Helen Keller (Rachel Manning) learns the meaning behind the letters Annie Sullivan (Christina Goggin) has been teaching her. The pivotal water pump and a river of water sat at the front of the set for the entire show, foreshadowing the dramatic ending.

KISS ME, KATE!

Photos and reporting by Callie Haven

1. Crewmembers attempt to hang the Ford's theatre sign, designed by scenic designer Cory Rodeheaver. The sign needed eight crew members and three-and-a-half hours to complete. Both Rodeheaver and lighting designer Kevin Gawley had to step in to complete the process that ran into a crucial tech rehearsal.
2. Evan Koons auditions for the lead role of Fred Graham. After his audition concluded, director Tracy Manning asked one last question: "Can you be funny, Evan?"
3. Koons leads one of his funniest scenes of rehearsal with the song "Where is the Life That Late I Led?" He kept the backstage staff laughing as his character, Fred, acted out the role of Petruchio from Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew.
4. The prompt book sits before the open stage, awaiting actors before rehearsal. Kiss Me, Kate! by Cole Porter begins with the aptly named song, "Another Op'nin, Another Show."
5. Choreographer Julie Lyn Barber heads up another run-through of the newly learned choreography for "Too Darn Hot" on September 30. Although the choreography was challenging at first, the song turned out to be one of the cast's favorites.
6. Musical director Dr. Patricia Robertson leads ensemble members in vocal warm-ups. As the show was a play within a play, the cast was challenged to portray characters who performed Shakespeare roles.

KISS ME, KATE!

1. Before Kiss Me, Kate! opens on November 15, the entire cast and crew join hands for a pep talk and final prayer from director Tracy Manning. The show ran for two weekends in November.

2. Kacey Heinlein practices a few moves before the opening show. Heinlein also worked as properties master for the show.

3. Jon McCourt puts on stage makeup for a technical run of the show on November 12. Between acting and working late nights as master carpenter, his exhaustion made the aging makeup easier each night.

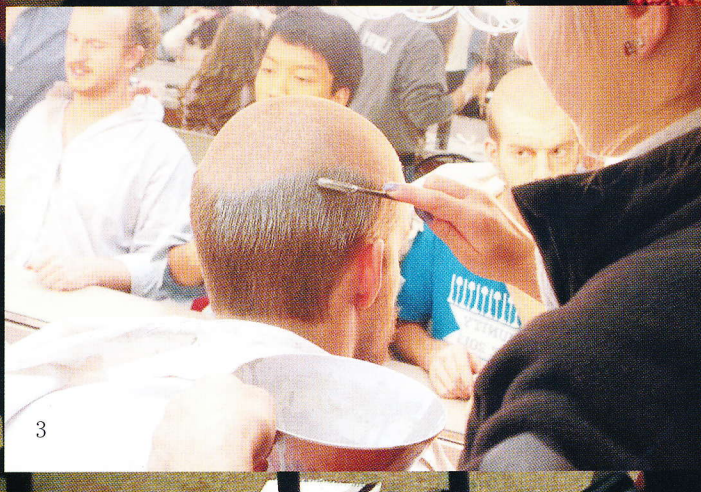

4. Hanna Ryberg and Evan Koons portray their characters, Lilli Vanessi and Fred, in one of their many quarrels during tech week. During tech week, actors had daily run-throughs of the entire show in full hair and makeup to work out any kinks before opening night.

5. Ryan Maloney, Evan Koons, and Terrence Volden share a laugh during a photo call performance on November 17. Volden also served as technical director.

6. After the final performance, Tyler Smith takes apart the iconic Ford's Theatre sign. Each cast member was asked to work ten hours on the technical aspect of the show, and within a few hours after the last show, the entire cast and crew began striking the set.

As the processional music began and the graduating seniors filed through the auditorium, they knew that they had a lot to be proud of. Graduating from college is a colossal accomplishment. A diploma in hand is a symbol of dedication, work ethic, and a desire to achieve something greater.

A diploma also signifies something else: moving on. While many hearts were filled with joy, pride, and enthusiasm, others felt the crushing weight of the inevitable question, "What's next?" For some, it may be graduate school. For many, it's the grueling process of job applications and interviews as they begin their careers. For still others, it's completely up in the air. Regardless of the next step in their journey, though, these graduates all have one thing in common:

"You are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for his own possession, that you may proclaim the excellencies of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."
(1 Peter 2:9, ESV)

They have all been called to something greater. It is time for the class of 2014 to step out into the world and fulfill the role that Taylor has been preparing them for: the role of servant leaders. Wherever they go and whatever path they pursue, this class has the power to initiate great change. If they touch the lives of the people around them with even a fraction of the love that they have shown us in their time here at Taylor, the world will be a much better place. —Kelly Raver

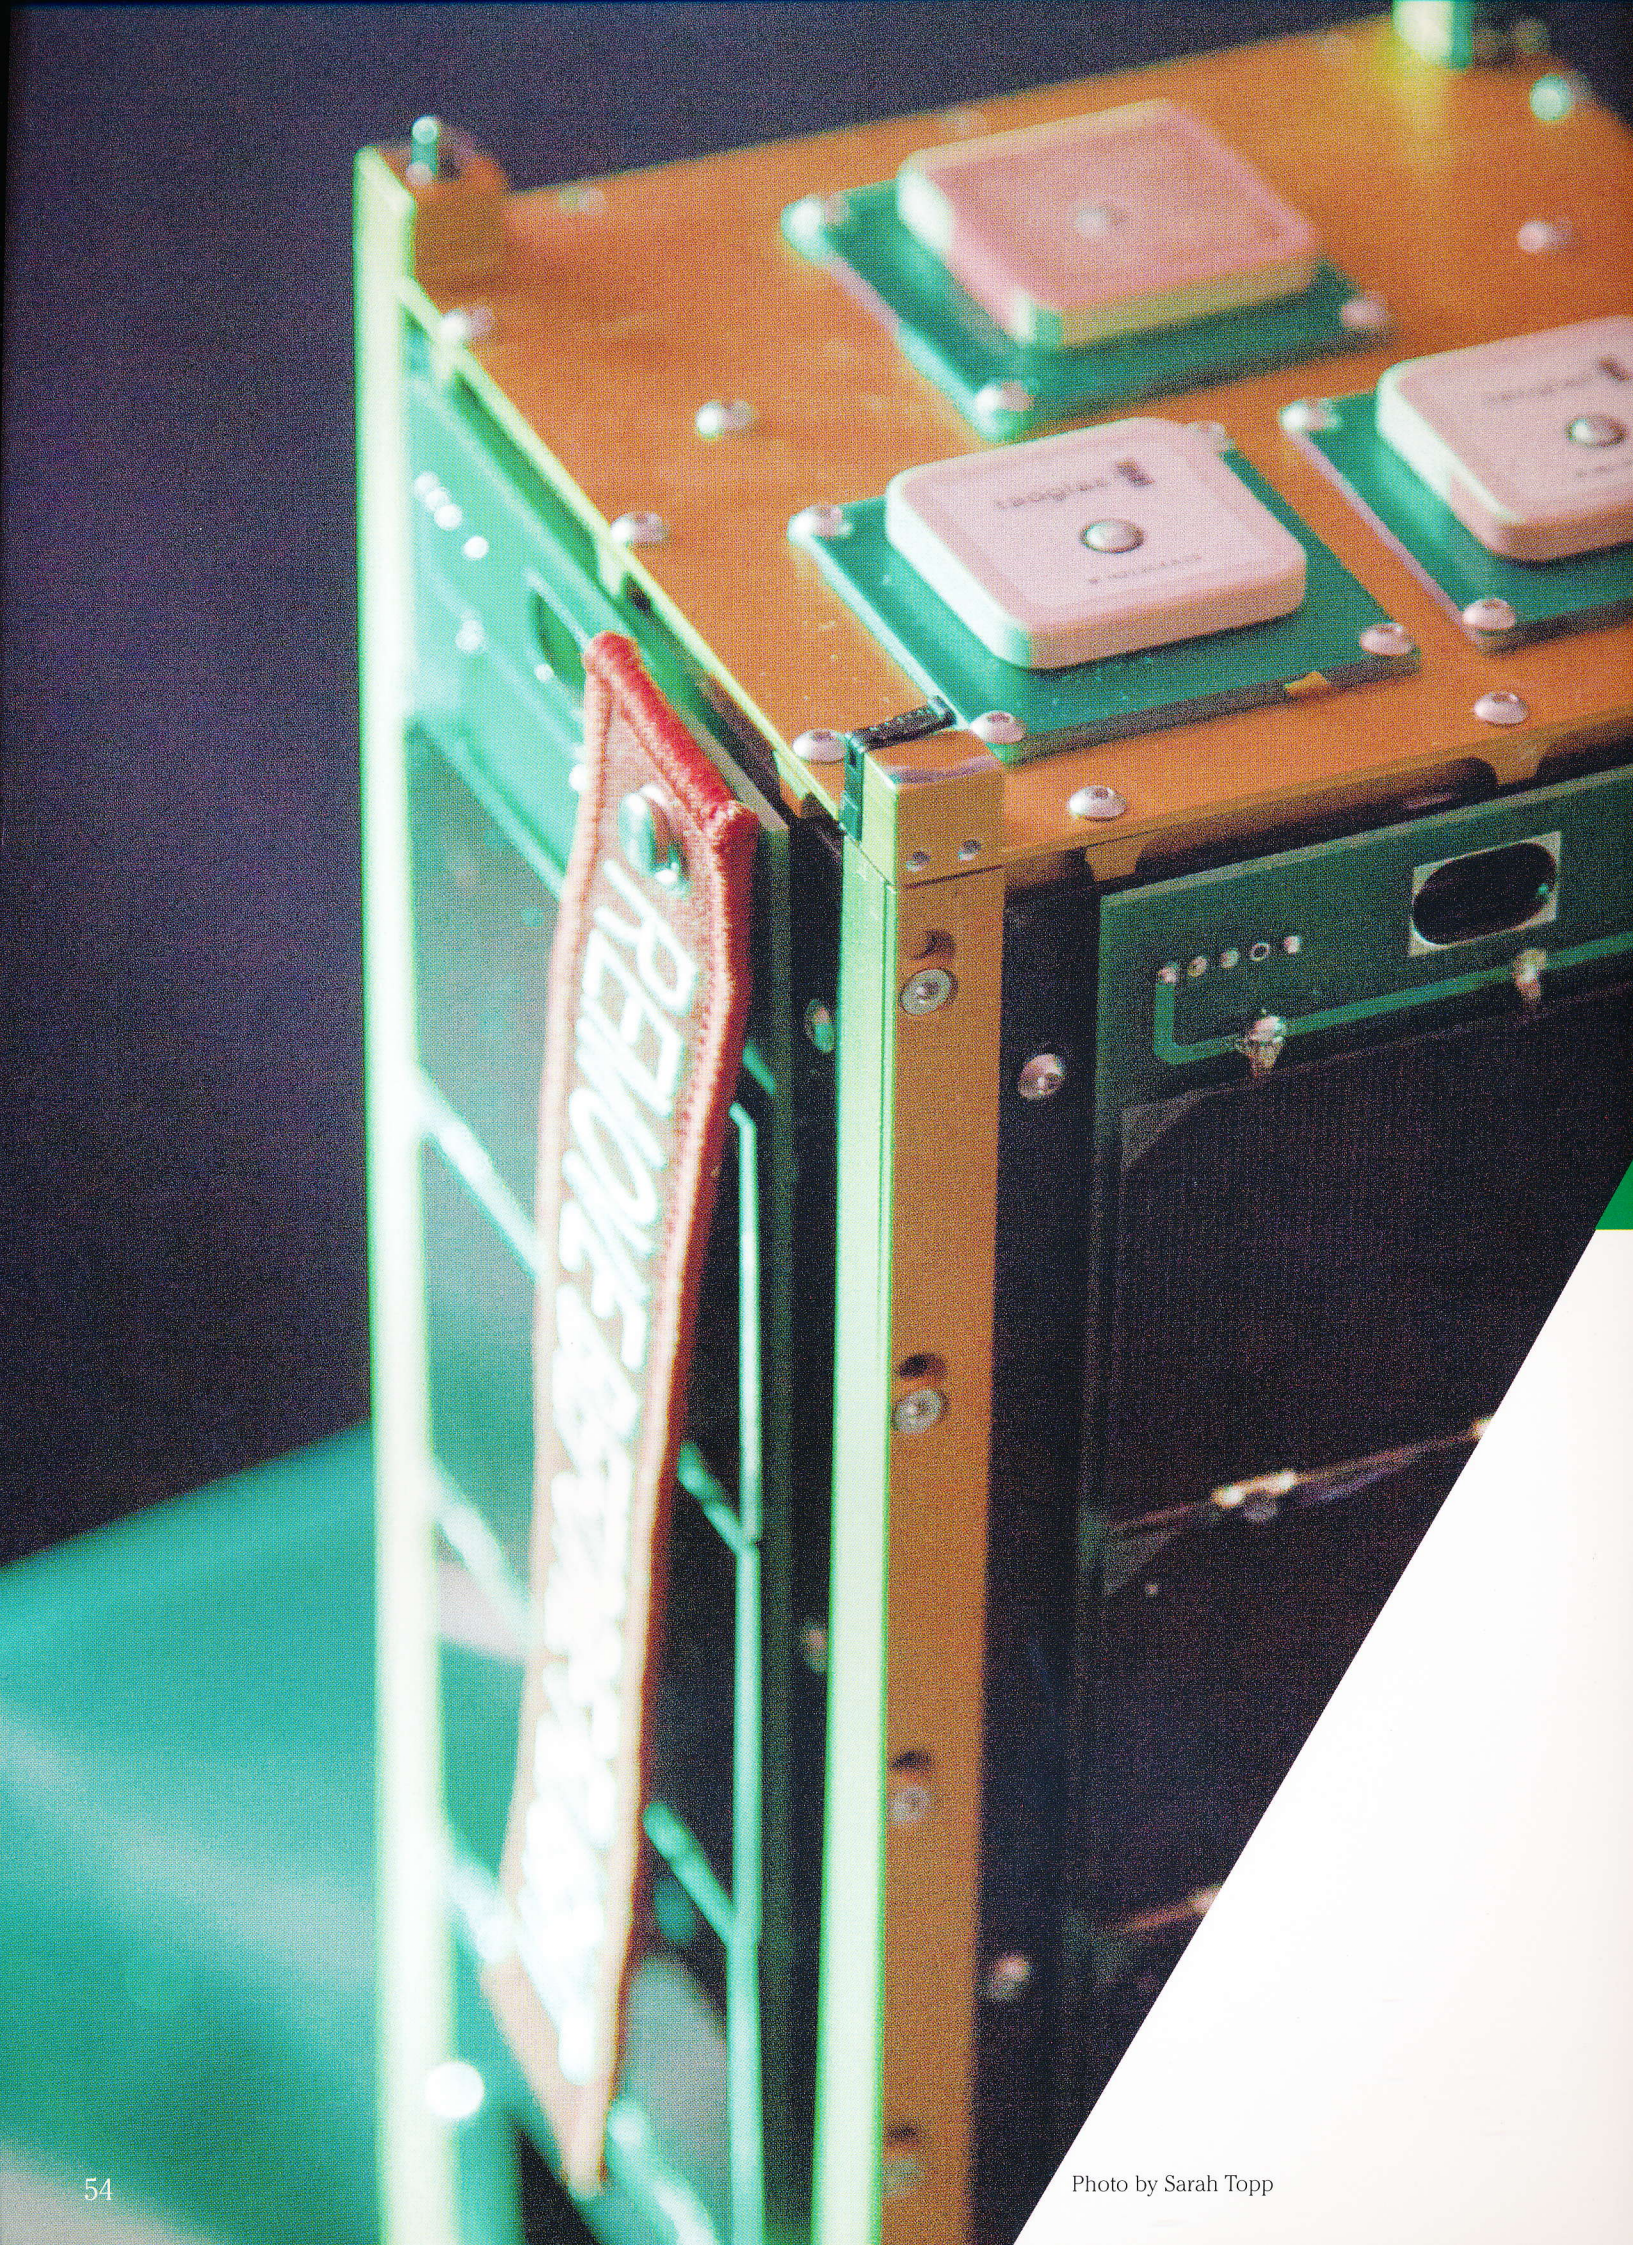

3. President Habecker turns the reigns over to senior class president Jason Koh for the Senior Class Welcome. Jason served as president of his class all four years at Taylor and plans to return to Taylor to receive his master's degree in the MAHE program.

4. Art education major Allie Lange joyfully accepts her diploma from President Habecker. Allie was one of 434 students that Taylor graduated in the spring of 2014.

5. Dr. Joseph Pak embraces students as they move through the processional at commencement. The processional featured music from the Taylor University Brass Choir and Organ, led by professor of music Dr. Albert Harrison and organist Laura Swartzendruber.

SPOTLIGHT ON: JONATHAN BOUW

Jonathan Bouw, professor and Art Department co-chair, spent the fall semester on sabbatical creating a children's picture book in the Philippines after being awarded a Fulbright scholarship. The highly competitive Fulbright program provides grants to students, professors, and working professionals in the pursuit of projects mutually beneficial to the U.S. and a sponsoring country.

Through his book, Bouw sought to preserve the indigenous culture and traditions of the Filipino people during a time of great industrialization and urbanization. As a missionary kid who was born in the Philippines, Bouw said one of the most rewarding parts of his time there was being able to share his childhood experiences with his family and reconnect with the people and culture he considers the home of his heart.

"My children came back with a greater understanding of the world, realizing that other cultures have just as much to offer as our own," Bouw said.

SPOTLIGHT ON: HANNAH RODWAY

Hannah was one of eight students that journeyed to Chicago over J-term to get a glimpse into the working lives of communication professionals in the area. During their week-long excursion, the group visited several large corporations and attended a talk by Matt Vander Laan, executive VP of Edelman. Hannah had this to say about what she learned:

"This trip confirmed that I can do a job that requires excellence day-in and day-out because that is what Taylor University has prepared me for and what my faith drives me to do. Being a Christian in a highly competitive work environment is a little risky, especially when media is involved. It is in how we react to problems that offer a testament to our faith and the content of our character."

MES

In a time when everyone seems to be “going green,” Taylor University Masters of Environmental Science students have taken the title of their major literally. The summer of 2013 marked a milestone for sustainable solutions at TU with the appearance of a campus garden. The idea for the garden had been germinating for some time in the MES department and came to fruition this year after a series of grant proposals and with the help of Drs. Michael Guebert and Paul Rothrock, Professor Rob Reber, Victory Acres farm manager Leslie Gottschalk, and students (Armila Francis, Libby Johnson, and Brian Donovan).

The purpose of the garden is to serve as a hands-on opportunity for students to learn about sustainable produce-growing practices while participating in service learning as an act of stewardship. The concept will also help cultivate relationships with people in the local community and surrounding areas.

Produce from the garden was sold at the local farmer’s market, distributed to members of Victory Acres, and donated to both the Serenity House ministry and underprivileged families in the Upland area. Additional produce was set out in the Randall building for hungry TU students and faculty to enjoy. — Kelly Raver

SPOTLIGHT ON: ARMILA FRANCIS

Armila is a senior MES major from Ann Arbor, Michigan. She spent her summer managing the new campus garden and testing the effects of various soil treatments, and said that the garden has been “a great source of joy and learning.” Armila also has a passion for environmental stewardship and believes that we can all “help sustain the beautiful world God has given us to tend.” Here are Armila’s top-three tips for students on going green:

- 1 Be careful of portions! If you’re eating at the DC, you always have the option to back for seconds. Instead of heaping a plate full of something you’re not sure you’ll eat, just try a little bit.
- 2 Spend time outside. Time spent outdoors typically results in a greater appreciation for our ecosystem which can translate into greater care.
- 3 Take shorter showers, unplug appliances when you’re not using them, leave a little extra time so you can walk or bike around campus, wash your clothes in cool water and hang them to dry, and shut off lights when you’re not in the room.

5. Olivia McCash participates in a turnip carving contest at the Garden Open House on Saturday, October 5. MES students provided snacks like zucchini bread, salsa, and hummus made with vegetables grown from the garden.

6. A crop gathered from the campus garden sits awaiting visitors to take vegetables home to enjoy. The garden provided over one ton of produce from July to December.

Students of Taylor University's physics and engineering department soared to new heights in 2014 with the preliminary launch of their nanosatellite, TSAT (Taylor Satellite). The 4-inch-tall satellite was 1 of 4 models selected out of 33 entered into NASA's ELaNa5 (Education Launch of Nanosatellite) Program and was the only entry to be designed and built entirely by undergraduate students.

Development of the satellite began in 2011 and concluded in the fall of 2013 with the work of an engineering team of 15 students and significant contributions from recent Taylor alumni. After being delayed on three occasions, the TSAT was finally launched on the afternoon of April 18. According to Dr. Hank Voss, physics and engineering professor and lead investigator for the project, the launch marks the third of its kind to be pioneered by Taylor students.

The satellite is used to measure plasma and wave propagation in ELEO (extremely low earth orbit). The ELEO project will collect data on space weather phenomena in the lower, relatively unexplored regions of the ionosphere. It also serves to test communications between existing satellites. — Kelly Raver

PROFESSIONAL WRITING

SPOTLIGHT ON: JEREMY PAUL

How many students can say that they have had their short film script produced and premiered in a Hollywood movie theater before they even finished their undergraduate degree? That impressive feat became a reality for senior professional writing major Jeremy Paul (above left). After discovering his passion for film and screenwriting, Jeremy had the opportunity to spend a semester studying at the Los Angeles Film Study Center and interning for a major literary and production management company, Madhouse Entertainment.

Jeremy not only had his short film script produced (for which he now has IMDb credit), but also completed his first feature-length screenplay and was privileged to work for and alongside industry professionals. A major highlight of the trip, said Jeremy, was being able to “experience the industry and make connections with people who are doing what I’d like to do someday.”

4. Professional writing majors adventure into the woods for some tree-climbing during the annual PWR bonfire. The bonfire was held at Dr. Pam Jordan-Long’s house in the fall semester.

5. Students attend the Write-to-Publish conference in Wheaton, Illinois. The conference was geared toward Christian writers and helping them improve their skills, make connections, and market themselves.

6. Professional writing majors take a break from their summer internship positions to pose for a photo together. Internships included work as staff journalists, editors, and public relations writers.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The women's soccer team took their soccer skills from Upland to Central America this summer. In Costa Rica, the Trojans had the opportunity to play against local professional teams and hold clinics to teach kids how to play. With seven new players and not a single practice under their belts, the girls still won all four games against the Costa Rican teams.

"The best part wasn't winning," sophomore Lauren Pfeifer said. "It was being able to earn the respect and curiosity of the other team. Their curiosity as to what made us so different from other teams is what allowed us to use the platform to glorify God. We took this opportunity to share with them our stories and how we strive to play with excellence for an audience of One."

The team did a lot more than kick balls during their summer trip to Costa Rica. They were able to share the gospel and the testimonies through soccer. "My favorite part was getting to know the people and bonding over what Christ has done with someone who lives halfway across the world," sophomore Madison Thompson said. The trip allowed for the team to not only connect with those they met in Costa Rica, but also with each other, paving the way for a 12-7 season. — Sally Baker

4. Junior Laura Liechty runs at the Crossroads League Championships. Liechty, along with juniors Allison Steinbeck and Jenna Norris, were named National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics Scholar-Athletes by keeping at least a 3.5 GPA.

5. Sophomore Jane Hawks sprints ahead, followed by junior Jenna Norris. Both were named to the All-Crossroads League Team with four other teammates because of the Trojans' win.

6. Sophomores Anissa Richards and Sarina Oleson round a corner together. The Trojans peaked at fourth in the NAIA Top-25 National Poll, their highest national rank in program history.

From the start of the season, "finish" was the word on the mind of the women's Cross Country team. The word carried them through the season and led them to their first NAIA National Championships since 1996.

"The word 'finish' reminded us at every practice, workout, and race to finish all the way through the line," junior Elaine Schmeltz explained. "This word helped set the tone of our season from the beginning."

Schmeltz, along with teammates Hannah Schroder, Allison Steinbeck, and Anna Meyer, broke records along the way. Schmeltz logged the 11th-fastest running time by an individual in Taylor history, while the others managed the 2nd-, 4th-, and 10th-fastest individual times respectively.

Before making it to Nationals, the team set the bar high by finishing 2nd place among 35 teams in the NAIA Pre-Nationals in October. "I think I speak for the whole team when I say we had a great experience at Pre-Nationals," Schmeltz said.

They ended in 10th place at Nationals, making it one of the best seasons the program has ever had.

"I was proud of each of my teammates and very thankful for Coach Quinn White," Schmeltz said. "I am grateful for the opportunity God gave us this season, and hopefully we will be blessed with more to come."

Halftime show. We have all heard this phrase. We are familiar with the usual forms of entertainment associated with it. Here at Taylor University, occasionally a local marching band would fill this time, but everything changed for 2013–2014.

POMS. One single word to describe one of the newest teams on Taylor's campus. POMS is an all-girls dance team that performs during the halftime period.

Alissa Deffenbaugh, freshman TU student, heard about the POMS team over the summer at orientation. After learning that Abby Adams was in charge she attempted to see if she could join. "I facebooked Abby to ask her what POMS actually was. Once she told me I knew I wanted to be a part of it," Deffenbaugh commented.

Danielle Spoutz, a transfer student from California also tried out for POMS. After a floormate explained the team to her, Spoutz went to the call-out meeting and prepared for the audition. The auditions were held at the beginning of the semester.

"We spent about three hours learning a dance that Abby came up with and then performed it in front of the judges with three other girls," Deffenbaugh said. "Then we had a one-on-one interview with the judges and Abby and got to show off some of our individual talents."

Deffenbaugh and Spoutz passed the auditions and were later asked to join the POMS team. Deffenbaugh believes that the gift of dance is one that God has given her, and she is choosing to use at Taylor University to glorify Him.

She recalled, "I remember at the tryouts just before it was time to dance, I looked up and said, 'This is for You.'"

Spoutz also has a passion for dance coupled with a desire to honor God through it. Making the POMS team created a space for Spoutz to exercise her passion. "I feel blessed, honored and excited! I'm so happy to be able to dance with a team of great girls to glorify God!" Spoutz said.

Learning the dances is a process that takes time and careful consideration. The POMS team is fully aware of the Life Together Covenant (LTC) and its guidelines for dance. "We just try to make it as clean and sharp as possible just to respect ourselves and the audience," Deffenbaugh said. Spoutz agreed that creating honorable dance can be difficult, but with a leader like Adams, the job is considerably easier.

"Abby does an amazing job of knowing what's inappropriate and not," Spoutz said. "She knows how to make moves look good without looking suggestive."

The attitude of self-respect and consideration for their peers is evident in their practices as well. "One thing we talk a lot about in practice is to tuck your hips in and have complete control of your body," said Deffenbaugh.

Not only is this the first year for an organized dance team, it is Deffenbaugh's first year at Taylor. Being a part of the team has helped her connect with others and become more involved on campus.

Maintaining focus can be difficult at times, but the group of girls on the POMS team are achieving both through supportive friendships and prayer. "We support and pray for each other on and off the field," Spoutz said.

You can catch a POMS performance at home football and basketball games.

“HEY, YODER...”

Why are you wearing that shirt?”

“Because its FRIDAY!”

After three years of yelling that announcement while wearing one very brightly-striped T-shirt, senior Jeff Yoder passed his role as Taylor’s official weekend welcomer to freshman Robbie Brandkamp on May 9.

“A small part of me is going to live on through the tradition, even though I am graduating,” Yoder said in an interview with The Echo.

Yoder was the fourth generation of a 3rd West Wengatz tradition that started in 2001. At the end of his freshman year, Yoder received the shirt from then senior Paul Bachman, who also received the shirt as a freshman from a senior on the wing.

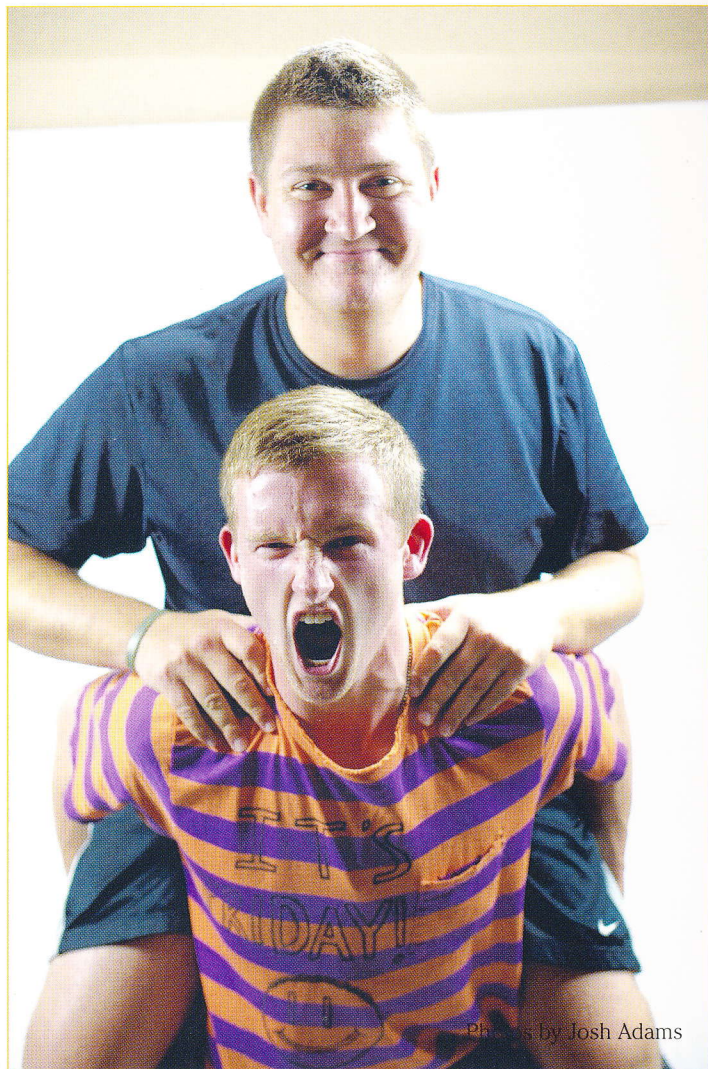

“My favorite part is the adrenaline rush at the end of Chapel,” Yoder said. “It’s like the anticipation of waiting for a roller coaster to start.”

Yoder presented the shirt to Brandkamp in front of the wing on the night of May 8. The next morning, as soon as a chapel coordinator dismissed the service, students turned their heads to the back row to see Yoder with a megaphone in hand for his last yell.

“Hey, Brandkamp! Why are you wearing that shirt?”

The next generation of a tradition had begun.
